

SASKATCHEWAN GOVERNMENT TO CANCEL 158 DROUGHT AREA MORTGAGES

Heavy Burden Lifted From 158 Drought Stricken Zones: Farm Mortgages Benefitted

REGINA, Sept. 28.—Cancellation of $75,000,000 in taxes, relief and interest debts of 158 drought area municipalities has been agreed upon by the Saskatchewan government. Marginal districts of 18 other rural municipalities will also benefit by the step. Following discussions with representatives of Canadian mortgage companies and a party caucus on Friday and Saturday, Premier W. J. Patterson on Monday announced sweeping plans for debt cancellation in the near future.

Farmers Will Be Benefitted Generally

Farmers generally throughout Saskatchewan will benefit by a reduction in all interest on all farm mortgages to six per cent from January, 1937. This will mean an annual saving to Saskatchewan farmers of approximately $4,000,000.

All unpaid interest accumulated in the drought area on mortgages up to January, 1936, is cancelled.

Amount owing on mortgages January 1, 1937, will be the principal of the mortgage, together with only an interest owing for the years 1933 and 1936. This interest will be consolidated with the principal and the consolidated amount is to be paid over a period of ten years.

Payment Ensured By One-Third Of Crop

Under the new agreement the principal will be paid annually with the balance due in the tenth year. During the first three years the payment of principal and interest will be secured by one-third of crop. Should one-third of crop not equal the amount of the annual payment, then time for payment will be extended to the next due date.

If the crop is less in value than ten bushels per acre No. 2 Northern, the current taxes may be deducted from the share due the company, and if it is over this value the debtor shall pay the current year's taxes from his share of the crop.

To Be Applied In Reducing Mortgage Debt

If the proceeds exceed the annual instalment of all principal and interest, the excess amount is to be applied in reduction of the mortgage debt.

All relief and seed grain indebtedness of rural recipients incurred before January 1, 1935, and advanced during the last 15 years, is to be cancelled. Taxes will be reduced on January 1, 1937, to approximate average of ten years.

Spain Insurgents

Besieged Force Freed After Ten Weeks Battering—Wildly Cheering Crowds Mob Fascist Headquarters—Second Major Victory Claimed

BURGOS, Spain, Sept. 28.—Wildly cheering crowds mobbed fascist headquarters today demanding the appearance of insurgent leaders as official announcement of the fall of Toledo threw this insurgent "capital" into a frenzy of joy. The official Fascist announcement of relief of Toledo, where besieged insurgents held the Alcazar fortress against government troops for nearly 10 weeks, was the second major victory claimed in 24 hours.

MADRID, Sept. 28.—The Spanish government today admitted that the fall of Toledo ended an urgent task of its army to hasten to their barracks, and suspended the rights of all public functionaries of ministerial or executive departments. The suspension order was not elaborated upon. The capital was quiet, but detailed news from Toledo was withheld from the people.

TOLEDO, Spain, Sept. 28.—The insurgent forces captured this city yesterday, rescuing the besieged Fascists in the Alcazar fortress and routing the government forces after they inflicted heavy losses. The Alcazar's occupants, who successfully resisted government attempts to oust them from the old military fortress-school for nearly 10 weeks, charged out of the fort and battled their way to join their deliverers, helping in the Fascist victory.

The insurgents entered the city at 1:30 p.m. The conquest of the ancient Moorish capital, 41 miles south of Madrid, came only after a terrific struggle in which Fascist command-buffs hurled trained shock troops of Legionnaires against the barricaded gates of the north side of the city. Airplanes on both sides played an important role. Government artillery boomed until sundown despite the insurgents' occupation several hours earlier, but there was little property damage.

Picked men, lagging machine guns, ran up the slopes in an effort to "blast government defenders from battlements behind the city's entrance. Infantrymen charged from their positions hand grenades into the government positions.

The city's defenders fought back. The insurgents' occupation of the city was not without casualties. The city's defenders fought back.

NO TYPHOID IN LOCAL WATER

There is absolutely no danger of a person contracting typhoid fever through the use of water from city mains. Dr. R. B. Jenkins, medical health officer, declared Saturday.

"I have received several inquiries about the safety of city water following my warning against the use of raw river water in its natural state," Dr. Jenkins explained. "Typhoid may be contracted from untreated water but certainly not from water pumped through city mains."

The householders' supply is safeguarded in every possible way and the water undergoes two chemical tests daily. It passes through two sedimentation basins for cleaning purposes, and then is passed through the filtering plant. The water is treated with alum and chlorine and is absolutely pure at all times.

PACIFIC FLIGHT

BEHOLD HERE TODAY
KAY THING, pretty simple story, tells in few words the story of the Pacific flight.
Ted had been in the air for 10 years. When Ted was 10 years old, he was taken to make a home for Dickie, but she was not there.
She does not agree, though, with Ted's theory that marriage is a success, just as a plane flight. She is rebellious because he wants to see her. Ted has written on a bullet.
Kay came with a small plane to dance one night and hear Ted's name. Ted was in the air. Ted's name was in the air. Ted's name was in the air.
NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY

CHAPTER XIX

KAY'S faith in Ted was not shaken by the group she had heard the night she danced with Monte. After the shock of the night, she had passed the realization that she and Ted had made a mistake, and Ted had been right.

For Ted lived an international life. On the trans-Pacific route, he met countless people whose names made news. In ports like Honolulu and Manila he knew the world was a whispering gallery, and he was in the center of it. He was a man of the world, and he was a man of the world.

On a smaller scale, Kay's life was now an international one. Because of her husband's fame, she was known from San Francisco to China. She was more than a wife, she was a woman. She was a woman of the world, and she was a woman of the world.

But struggling against her own nature made her restless. She wanted to be going places, doing something all the time. Ted met such moods with an air of indifference that convinced her that she was not needed. But the recurrence of the conflict in their nature could not but make her restless. Kay began to suspect again that Ted had married her only to give her a home for Dickie, and to afford him a well-ordered life.

She didn't go to the landings to see him come in when his ship arrived. She had heard that Ted was aboard and she didn't want to face her.

The morning after the night of the ship's arrival, Kay was at the airport. At that moment Kay was at the airport. At that moment Kay was at the airport. At that moment Kay was at the airport. At that moment Kay was at the airport.

She invited to their home that night all of the barons of the airport—people who had no part in the enterprise, but lived in the aviation colony to share the excitement and glamour. It was a sort of aviation-country club crowd.

Since the party was impromptu and informal, all the guests accepted the invitations in a similar manner. It was like an open house. Some of them even brought other friends without consulting Kay.

Many of the guests had read about Ted Graham's exploits, but had never met him. They were curious. They were curious. They were curious. They were curious. They were curious.

They all came, and they were on time. Toward 10 o'clock the three rooms which had been thrown open to guests were filled, and people had begun to take possession of the porch and even the kitchen. Some of the invited Dickie's nursery and woke him up. Some played piggyback with him, long past his hour for sleep.

Ted was a little bewildered at the sight. He had come home late for dinner and found that the guests had already begun to arrive. The members of the army crowd were strangers to him. Nobody bothered to introduce him, but he supposed they were Kay's friends.

They were tired and sleepy and, at last, retired to his den, but some of the men had already taken possession of the floor and didn't even look up when Ted came in. A woman hurried after him and caught his arm.

"Ted Graham!" she exclaimed breathlessly. "Do tell me that fascinating creature you brought with you today on the plane. We read about her in the papers. Is she really a sensation?"

Ted laughed. He felt certain that if Dickie had been there the woman would have lifted her lorgnette and stared at it as a monster in the fog.

"I've seen her before," Ted said. "And she dances remarkably well."

"Then I'm sorry she didn't come to your party. I came all the way from San Francisco just to see her!" Pique was written on the wrinkles of the dowager's face.

The whole evening, to Ted, was as grotesque as this one incident. The gaiety of the crowd was exaggerated. Some of the guests depicted because Dickie wasn't there to dance for them, soon departed.

Ted sought refuge from the brittle chatter at Kay's side, but he was in the center of an adjoining throng and he couldn't seem to get rid of her. She was wearing a slinky white evening gown that he had never liked to see her wear.

When he came close to her, he was listening attentively to Monte Blaine and did not even see Ted.

He went upstairs again, and finding his door empty, unlocked it and went to bed. He was tired and he had a headache.

He had heard her go upstairs and the followed as soon as she was able to slip away. Finding the door locked, she knocked. There was no answer from within the room, which was dark, she knew. She tried the doorknob.

"Locked?" she thought anxiously. "He's asleep. The idea—insulting me by going to sleep during my party. While there are guests in the house!"

Ted's asperity indifference annoyed her. "Asperity?" she stormed inwardly. "What's that? I tried to go out with Dickie and that woman who was in the room with me. She took a small fit at the door, trembling with rage and disappointment. I tried, and I tried, and I tried. I'll show you. I'll go upstairs and show you. I'll go upstairs and show you."

She went downstairs again, joined in the fun even more joyfully. Kay's adventurous spirit had finally broken its bonds and Monte Blaine shared this mood. When it was proposed that they all go someplace across the bay to continue the party, Kay was among the first to agree.

They went to one night club and then another. Gradually the crowd grew smaller, but Kay was determined to see the last of the party.

At last there were only the three of them left—Kay and Dickie and Ted. They decided to stop for breakfast at a beach hotel and they stood on the beach, watching the sea lions come in. Life on the island was so different from life on the mainland.

One grizzled old male thrust his nose in the air and tried to enforce order on his wife. He must have been a very old man. He must have been a very old man. He must have been a very old man.

But the young sea lion didn't pay him any heed. One by one, they waddled down the edge of the rocks and plunged, bobbing up out of the water with weird snorts and grunts.

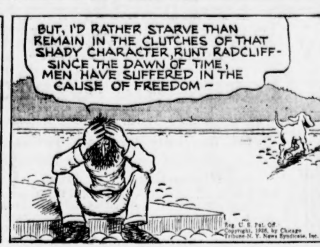

When they were tired of watching these antics, Kay, Dickie and Monte went inside to order their hot coffee. Where they sat, they could watch the sea lions running up out of the blue Pacific.

Kay kept thinking about Ted, back there at home, sound asleep as though he didn't care what became of her or whether or not she was having a good time.
